London Metropolitan University is proud to welcome you once again to the Final Cuts Festival where we showcase films from across our courses in the School of Computing and Digital Media, including the graduation films of students in BA Film and Broadcast Production. This year students have worked under the continuing additional pressures brought about by COVID-19 and recurrent lockdowns, and this means that once again we could not exhibit these films in their natural home – the cinema. However, these restrictions have led to a flourishing of creativity, and this online festival means we can also include films from students in their first and second years of study, as well as the final student film projects of our graduating students.

Films this year present indecent proposals, uncanny animations, drug-fuelled journeys, ditzzy detectives, kidnappings, and messages to (and from) those we have lost.

These young filmmakers are rightly proud of their work, produced across a range of genres and in the midst of huge uncertainty and change. Congratulations to them all.
